Capitol Hill

by Katie Clark

Capitol Hill is the seat of the American government. This is where the Senate and the House of Representatives meet. It is where you can find the Library of Congress and the Supreme Court. There are many historic monuments in the area. Visitors come from all over the country to see it.

Capitol Hill is in Washington, D.C. It was chosen by George Washington. The land was ceded by Maryland, and constructed by James Hoban.

The first project for the new Congress would need a building. How could they house the new Congress?

Thomas Jefferson's plan would win five votes. President George Washington did not like it. He sent in his design. By 1800, the contest had ended.

When the leaders saw his plans, though, they chose his design as the winner. He suggested a central building with a dome. There would be two wings off the central building. One wing would hold the Senate. The other wing would hold the House of Representatives.

Construction started right away, but the builders had many problems. They had trouble getting enough money for supplies. It took many years to complete a small part of the building. In the year 1800, the Congress was able to meet in the Capitol building for the first time.

The Library of Congress and the Supreme Court also began meeting in the Capitol building by 1801. Many changes were made to the building over the years. Updates were made to make it more modern. Running water, gas lighting, elevators, and electricity were added. The building is getting bigger, as more congressmen joined. New states joined the union at a faster rate. More states could fit all the state leaders.

Today the Capitol is 555 feet long, and 350 feet wide. The Capitol Dome is 286 feet high. The building is made mostly of sandstone. It cost millions of dollars to build, update, and maintain.

Inside the Capitol, you can see the House and the Senate. You can also see the Rotunda. The Rotunda has lots of historic paintings, including the Declaration of Independence and the Emancipation Proclamation.

The Capitol building isn't the only major attraction on Capitol Hill. The Library of Congress and Supreme Court buildings are also located there. They did meet inside the Capitol building at first, but they were moved to their own homes as the country grew.

John Adams founded the Library of Congress in 1800. The books were meant to help the congressmen as they made and upheld laws. After the Civil War in 1861, the leaders realized the library could help all American people. After that, the library collection grew quickly.

A new building was built for the books. It opened in 1898. Today, the Library of Congress is made up of three separate buildings. The Thomas Jefferson Building is the most popular. There are over sixteen million books there today. There are also millions of other written items.

Today, Capitol Hill remains a proud mix of history and modern politics. It is used by the United States legislative and judicial branches. It is visited by millions of guests each year who come to tour the capital city. Guests can even secure passes that grant them entry into an active session of Congress. This allows them to see their United States Senators or Representatives in action.
